Chapter 1 by Story Wars

I heard the eerie creaking sound of the door opening slowly. Out came a man wearing long, large dark cloak he stood tall a few inches higher than the door. He held long black cane in his hand with a silver owl embowelled on its hilt.

He carried with him many animals. On his left shoulder was a large black owl. It stood contently on his shoulder blade peering every which way, as if trying to get a glance of anything peculiar. Eventually the owl's eyes finally set on me. His eyes were blood red. Staring for a moment at me he tilted his head then turned his face away from me a second later as if I wasn't even there to begin with. On his right shoulder was a black raven with silver eyes and a long beak bent downward as if it were broken. Unlike the owl his face stayed forward, with no concern for anything around him.

Then I saw something moving beneath him. A large green snake littered with black spots all over his body. He made no sound what so ever, he was unusually silent for a snake. The snake moved slowly bending from side to side trying it's best to stay closely to its master. He stood near his feet and would dart from underneath his cloak and out again.

In addition to his parade of creatures the man also carried a large sword covered in a black hilt. He harboured many rings along his fingers carrying various markings and emblems.

He looked around the room and glanced at everything. He turned towards me, walking towards the door I had hid behind. As he got closer I crawled away and hid behind the couch. The door squeaked as it opened and I covered my mouth hoping my breath wouldn't give me away. His heavy footsteps got closer echoing louder each time. He passed over the couch and stared over the pile of books and papers on the desk nearby.
